Freedom's Ransom deals with the aftermath of the rebellion. Starting on Botany, then to Earth, then to Barevi, Zainal conceives of a complex trade relationship that will benefit the humans, the Catteni, and their other alien allies. Many of the things they trade are coffee and dentistry. They need the vast amount of supplies looted from Terra.

While Rockwell conceptualized the Four Freedoms in quintessential small-town settings, Elmer Rice's unpublished, undated essay "The Four Freedoms," part of the Ransom Center's Elmer Rice papers, paints a slightly different picture. Rice described a varied landscape of individuals who, although from vastly different backgrounds, are united as Americans by the intrinsic value they place on the Four Freedoms.
